Therapists enter young clients' play world

If children's play can be viewed as their "work," it follows that adults enter their expressive play world to work with them.

By GAIL SJUBERG
Driftwood Staff Writer

Dallas Atkins and Stuart Eiseman specialize in process-based child, youth and family counselling using creative techniques that encourage self-awareness, increased self-esteem, emotional growth and a model for effective expression and communication.

They have recently opened a practice from their home at 1510 Beaver Point Road.

One aspect of their child counselling work involves meeting youngsters in their current active world.

"Children project their present experience into play," explains Atkins.

"Their play has a rhythm of its own and it is their work," adds Eiseman. "It is the stage on which they work out the drama of their lives."

It is easy to visualize Atkins and Eiseman familiarizing themselves with a child's inner workings in their toy-filled office.

Young clients are encouraged to choose playmates from baskets of animal and figure puppets. The counsellor also chooses a puppet and may interact with the child through that medium.

The "sand tray" is another area ripe for exploration. A rectangular wooden tray full of sand with table-like legs, the sand tray can be filled with miniature figures including animals, vehicles, structures, people and archetypes.

Children create scenes as they would at home, with friends or siblings, though with some direction from the therapists.

"We allow children and their natural tendency to play with us," says Eiseman, "and allow them to discover and explore their own world without disruption." The relaxed atmosphere and indirect communication between voices spoken through toys also enhances the therapeutic process.

As Atkins notes, "Because you are not focused directly on the child, (he or she) can speak more easily."

The children find words in a safe place while they have fun — "they are not worried about how mom is going to react, for example."

READY TO WORK: Dallas Atkins and Stuart Eiseman are surrounded by some of the tools of their trade as therapists using the Oaklander Model. Puppets, the sand tray (right), artistic toys and games assist Atkins and Eiseman in their new Salt Spring Island counselling practice.

Conversely, a figure or puppet could become "mom" and the child can have a spontaneous practice conversation with that person.

Atkins stresses that they try to "establish a good relationship with the child where the child is respected and where (his or her) thoughts and feelings are respected and valued."

Eiseman notes this respect includes not "presuming" to know the interior world of children or accepting viewpoints of parents or dominant people over those of a client.

"Any work done with children is going to pay off in later years," observes Atkins. "So much of an individual's pain can be shortened if it is dealt with earlier in life."

While much of their work is focused on children, and includes teenagers, Atkins and Eiseman say their methods are effective for adults as well.

They use the Oaklander Model of Gestalt therapy which they describe briefly as "a nonanalytical, noninterpretive form of psychotherapy that is concerned with the whole person — body, feelings, intellect, intuitive sense — as well as with awareness and self-acceptance as prelude to growth and change."

Atkins says it follows a basic premise that "everyone comes into the world as an

ISLAND LIVING

New chapter opened in Saturna road saga

Saturna Island residents were looking forward to the end of more than a month of road closures on Friday, August 9.

By GAIL TRAFFORD
Driftwood Correspondent

Closures to the island's main roadway had caused havoc to island living over the past month while road crews worked to repair the road following a major landslide last January.

However, 10 minutes after workers and equipment left the island via ferry, heavy rains brought down another slide.

Tip and Colleen Walker narrowly missed being pushed over the edge of the road by falling rock. Colleen Walker spotted a tree moving above them and warned her husband to drive faster. He picked up speed and the two looked back to see the rocks falling across the road behind them.

An estimated 500 yards of rubble fell.

This slide was mild compared to the original washout and John Money was able to open the road to single lane traffic within about an hour.

But work crews must return for at least a few more days to completely clear the debris.

Unless further serious washouts occur, the road should be open without interruption until September when a crew is scheduled to apply a chip seal surface.

organism with a healthy basis that has the capacity to have its needs met." As humans develop they are "constantly striving to get needs met." Problems arise when there are "interruptions" in that process — usually in the form of trauma.

Behavioural problems are the visible signs that some form of interruption has taken place and which prompts people to seek their assistance.

Atkins says their goal as therapists is to help people go forward as they would naturally if those interruptions had not occurred. The ideal comes from within that person rather than outside models.

Both received their Master of Arts degrees in counselling psychology from the University of California, Santa Barbara. They are clinical members of the British Columbia Association for Marriage and Family Therapy.

The two worked as family counsellors at Klein Bottle Youth Programs in Santa Barbara, Atkins has been a medical clinic and chemical dependency treatment centre counsellor and an attorney specializing in adoptions.

Eiseman was a teacher from pre-school to college grades before entering masters studies.

The couple made connections with Salt Spring in January and from there "wanted very much to find a way to be here," says Eiseman.

Atkins says "we have a high need for a strong sense of community" which they feel can be met on the island.

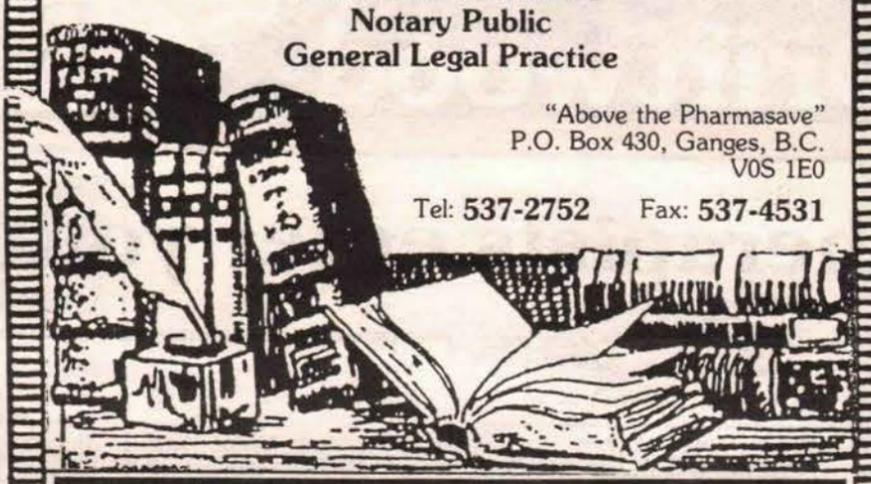

They have also made part of their Beaver Point Road home into Wild Man Gallery, containing their artwork and cards made from reproductions of some paintings.

Working as artists is a natural extension of their therapy practice, drawing as it does on everyone's inherent creativity.

Saturna takes annual tourney

Saturna Island baseball players slammed a Mayne Islanders in this year's inter-island baseball tournament.

By GAIL TRAFFORD
Driftwood Correspondent

Saturna hosted the August 3 tournament between the Mayne and Saturna teams. A Pender Island team was unable to attend.

SATURNA ISLAND NEWS

Saturna took the first game in a landslide 20-8 victory. Participants then took a break in Winter Cove Park, enjoying swimming and beverages before continuing with the second game. Mayne came to life in the second game but failed to completely subdue Saturna which took the game 11-9.

The day culminated with a barbecue for all participants and their families at Paul Deveau's home.

Lamb barbecue site

Anne Popperwell and the lamb barbecue committee are hoping to meet with Bill Shaw and Dave Chater of the Parks Board to ensure continuing use of Winter Cove Park as the annual lamb barbecue site.

To date, the committee has had to negotiate use of the site annually.

It is hoped that the Parks Board will grant perpetual use of the park to the community for this event.

Flea market

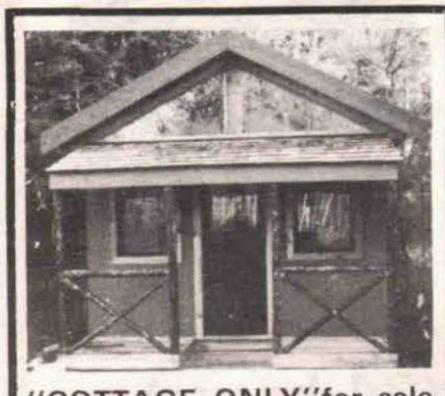

The recycling committee has scheduled a flea market for Saturday, August 17 to promote the exchange rather than the disposal of reusable items.

Tables will be available at the site for a $5 fee to dealers. This will cover the cost of complimentary coffee and cookies.

Participants are encouraged to share tables and the hours involved.

The committee would like to see produce and canning, as well as household goods, tools, and other useful items for sale.

The flea market will be open 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., the regular recycling hours.

"COTTAGE ONLY" for sale.

FINAL TOUCHES: Wendy Roberts was one of 12 Needleguild members to work on this queen-sized quilt which will be raffled off as a GIFT benefit. Driftwood photo by Alistair Ross

Quilt to benefit projects

Women involved in St. Margaret's Needleguild recently completed a queen-sized hand sewn quilt which they have offered to the Galiano Island Forest Trust to raffle as fund-raising effort.

GIFT will pay the Galiano Island quilters an appropriate amount for the quilt as tickets are sold. The Needleguild will, in turn, give these funds to St. Margaret's Building Fund.

In this way two worthy causes will be supported.

The quilt, in pinks and blues and featuring the spools design, is the work of 12 guild members. It represents hundreds of hours of effort.

The quilt was on display at the Lion's Fiesta and can now be seen at GIFT headquarters at the Daystar Market. Raffle tickets are $5 each or three for $10.

The draw will take place later this year.

Help needed to complete Galiano firehall addition

Work is progressing on an addition to the squad room at the South Galiano Firehall.

Construction began about four weeks ago with volunteer labour and the building is now framed and ready for its tar and gravel roof.

Shakes from the mansard style roof on the side of the building have been removed, and are being stored for future use on the newly extended roof — an attempt to keep continuity in colour across the face of the building.

Chester Williams and Ottmar Bobsien are coordinating construction with help from Jim MacDonald, John Sibbald, Art Grist and others.

The squad room addition will allow twice as much room for volunteer firefighters' training sessions and seminars. Its interior will be finished to match the preset smaller room and have a lino covering on the floor.

Those who have the time and talent to help complete this project are encouraged to phone Chester Williams at 539-2461.

ISLAND LIVING

GALIANO ISLAND Scene

Saturday of the holiday weekend created a warm and sunny backdrop for the Lion's 20th annual Fiesta celebration.

By ALISTAIR ROSS
Driftwood Correspondent

The group worked hard in the weeks previous to have everything ready for stall operators when they arrived at 8 a.m. August 3 to set up their wares.

One of the first sales area to be set up was St. Margaret's Church where Wendy Roberts, Margaret Edgar and helpers soon had the coffee on and the muffins buttered.

Bill Callaway of the Galiano Club set up a model of the soon to be renovated south hall for all to see, and nearby, the teens' group sold t-shirts and raffle tickets to raise funds for the teen centre.

Other groups represented were the South Galiano Fire Auxiliary, the Ladies Service Club, Gulf Islands Television Society, the Health Care Society, GIFT and the Conservancy Association — to name only a few.

The Thrift Shop reportedly did a roaring business.

Diane Klau and Marion Alsbury operated a cold drink stand near the popular dunking pool while Michelle Klau and her friends tended the games of chance.

Master of Ceremonies Gordon Hodson, working from the stage, announced upcoming events; Barbara Landmark entertained with her piano music as did Gary Newstead. Later in the day a band played in the beer garden.

Popular Sunny the Clown entertained the children as he has at previous fiestas. Barbecued chicken and salmon steaks were sold over the lunch hour by chefs Bob Bob-sien, Wally Schuh and Bill Shead.

The lack of a parade this year made for a slower start than usual and the crowds took longer to fill the grounds. The excitement of continual sporting events and dance numbers was largely missing from the program, so some of the excitement of participation was missing. Funds raised at the Fiesta will be made available — as always — to on- and off-island charities.

Garden Club Picnic

Tickets are now sold out for the Garden Club's Edwardian Picnic.

This event will be held at "Salishan" — the home of Bill and Phyllis Stafford — on Thursday, August 22.

Gourmet picnic baskets will be supplied for picnickers. Croquet, musical numbers and dancing will be offered as entertainment. There will also be a treasure hunt.

The venue for the picnic is a grassy area on an outer point at Saltery Bay with Trincomali Channel and its rocky shores as a backdrop. The luncheon will begin at 1:30 p.m.

Mid-summer barbecue

A beef and salmon barbecue is scheduled for the North Galiano Hall on Saturday, August 24.

A meal consisting of either beef or salmon will be accompanied by a marinated salad, new and oven-roasted potatoes, rolls and green salad. Dessert will consist of fresh fruit salad and squares with tea and coffee. There will also be a bar.

Money raised by the barbecue will go towards purchase of fire equipment for the North Galiano Fire Department.

PROVINCIAL ROUND-UP

by Hubert Beyer

Hydro transmission revived

The Kelly-Cheekeye transmission line proposal, plans for which were abandoned in the early 1980s because of less than anticipated load growth, has been revived.

Energy Minister Jack Weisgerber said last week that B.C. Hydro has applied for an Energy Project Certificate for the 500-kilovolt transmission line project between Clinton and Squamish.

The single circuit line is being proposed to meet projected increases in electrical needs in the Lower Mainland and on Vancouver Island.

Pre-election swing

With a general election probably less than two months away, NDP leader Mike Harcourt continued his travels across the province. His latest pre-election tour took him on a swing through Vernon, Armstrong, Enderby, Salmon Arm and Revelstoke.

Unlike Premier Johnston, however, who ran into a lot of criticism over her cabinet tour via B.C. Rail, Harcourt opted for air and car transportation.

Parochial Perry

Forest Minister Claude Richmond levelled a well-aimed broadside at NDP health critic Tom Perry last week. Lambasting Perry for his criticism of the government's decision to allow the export of yew tree bark for a limited time, Richmond said he had expected the NDP member, a medical doctor, to be less parochial.

The government recently gave the green light to the export of the bark for a six-month period to the U.S. firm which will extract from it an anti-cancer drug call taxol. Part of the taxol will be shipped back to British Columbia for research purposes.

"Fighting cancer is not a political issue.

The fight to find a cure for cancer is not restricted by international boundaries," Richmond said in a letter to Perry.

The minister also pointed out that at this time, no B.C. company can process the bark. And unless the bark is harvested now, it will rot on the ground, Richmond added.

Aids update

Health Minister Bruce Strachan last week announced the latest results of the B.C. Centre for Disease Control's AIDS antibody tests, covering 163,053 tests over a five-year and nine-month period.

A total of 4,713 tests performed were positive for the AIDS virus. Of those, 3,220 were homosexual-bisexuals, 166 intravenous drug users, 60 haemophiliacs, 197 heterosexual contacts, 16 prostitutes, 70 multiple blood transfusion recipients and 980 for which the risk category was not specified.

The minister stressed that the number of positive test results should not be confused with the actual cases of AIDS. To date, there have been 971 cases of AIDS in British Columbia since the first case was reported in January 1983, and of this group, 638 have died.

Current estimates of persons infected with the AIDS virus ranges from 5,000 to 8,000.

Veterans' facility

In a joint announcement, the federal and provincial governments last week announced plans for the construction of a new multi-level care facility for veterans to be built in Saanich, near Victoria.

The new facility will be based on an innovative concept of providing a total of 225 beds within six relatively self-contained lodges. The estimated cost of $22 million will be shared equally by the two governments.

THIS JUST DOESN'T HAPPEN OFTEN!

3 1/4 acres of beautifully wooded land across the road from the sea for sale in Fulford Harbour! That's right...and you'll have to move quickly on this one! The property slopes gently up from the road with one possible homesite that will have some sea and sunset views. A second home site is on a wonderful secluded rocky knoll at the back of the acreage set in the tall timber. Remember, you can have both a house and a guest cottage on this property. It's on community water, hydro, phone and cablevision, and just a few minutes stroll to Fulford Village. All this for $82,000 MLS - NO, THIS REALLY DOESN'T HAPPEN OFTEN!
